Lieutenants Potti and Wiley, of the military police, told the Commissioner that they entered Mutchler's place on Saturday and surprised him in the act of carrying bottled beer and flasks of whiskey into the cellar. Behind the bar, they said, they found more. They also alleged that the saloonkeeper when arrested tried to bribe them by offering a $20 hill. He also attacked them. He was held in $5,000 bail for the grand jury.

Provost Marshal General Crowder to describe the final order came to break camp there was sufficient food on hand to feed 15,000 men three weeks.

For many days after the artillery regiments had been filled to the strength authorized by the government recruits continued to arrive, and had to be sent to other camps.

The training of the men was handicapped by lack of ordnance. When the 4th Field Artillery was expanded from the 15th it was understood by the commanding officers that new 3 inch guns would be sent to the new unit. The field pieces never came, however, and both regiments were forced to drill with the guns of the Fourth. The provisional battery of artillery afterward organized at the fair grounds never had any guns at all and had to drill as infantry. When a rifle range was to be built near Tully, N. Y., a vast quantity of ammunition was shipped there and then shipped back again when the plans were cancelled. for Mayor, would put him second in the race instead of third.
